DAILY LEADER.

The Pursuits and Deaths of Booth. We extract from the London Times of May 12th, the following:—“There is a very dramatic account of the assassin. As a capital punishment it may be worthy of professional study to many of our own journalists.”

A dramatic death has been the lot of the man who murdered President Lincoln. A fate too like a soldier’s has ended the career of one whose deed has made every soldier on both sides indignant or ashamed.—

The author of the death of the assassin will receive from several sources of the death of his victim, the capture of his accomplice, form one of the most interesting accounts of the war. The act of itself was full of horrible audacity, and that is keeping with it. When the murderer leaped from the box on the stage, a height of nine or ten feet, he broke his leg. He is described as having been shot in the head, but the bullet had not had enough strength to rise up, and went out the motto of Virginia as the defense of his crime. Still the leap probably proved fatal to him. With that disregard of pain which is often shown in the first moments of a wound by men under the influence of strong excitement, he was able with his strong legs to walk across the stage, and then to go down the stairs. They were adopted for men and females, older young, and even old people, in all cases of specimens of beauty, whether in color or shape, or in white, yellow, or black, or in any other color.
